Gov. Andrew Cuomo is the only former New York attorney general not to have records housed at the New York State Archives, City & State is reporting.

City & State reports that it is unknown where the records are. Cuomo directed his staff at the time to pack up documents such as emails, press releases and correspondence. They were expected to be stored at the State Archives but they never arrived, a spokesman for the State Archives told City & State.

"I can tell you right now the records of the attorney general aren't in the Archives," said Robert Bullock, spokesman for the New York State Archives.
