Josh is currently earning a grade of 23.4. Last week, he had assured me that a significant percentage of the work that he ought to have been turning in regularly in order to make up for missed assignments would be turned in on Monday. Unfortunately, Josh missed class on Monday; I hope he is able to turn in this work that is still due soon. In our last month of class, we will have coming due: two papers, two sets of review sheets and two sets of chapter notes. All the while, students will be expected to be preparing themselves for the final exam (the essay prompt will be released next week). A great concern of mine is that with this work not having been turned in will prove to be a distraction as we head into the home stretch of the year. I will do all that I can in order to help Josh understand his obligations and conditions for the most successful conclusion to the year possible.

Josh has made some improvements since our meeting on April 16th. He is more attentive in class recently. He made up his project and some homework, but still missed five of the eight homework assignments and the works he turned in were either late or incomplete. Josh would benefit greatly from staying focus in class; completing his homework thoroughly in a timely manner and studying on a daily basis.

We will have at least two quizzes and several homework assignments remaining before the final exam. So Josh can still improve his grade if he is willing to put forth more effort. Based on one project, two tests, four quizzes and eight homework assignments, Josh is currently earning a D for the fourth quarter.

As I mentioned in a recent email, Josh's homework has improved, both in its quality, and in the regularity with which he is handing it in. He did not do well, however, on the last test because some of the material on that test came earlier in the quarter before he tried to turn over a new leaf. I think he has a fairly good grasp of what we are doing now, and there are still some assessments left in the quarter where he can regain some of the ground he lost earlier. Anything we can do to push him along the path would be helpful.

Josh's performance has improved since I wrote my last comment. He is scoring better grades on tests, paying attention in class, and overall, showing eagerness to succeed. I strongly encourage him to continue working in such a way for the remaining of the school year.
