Subject: Vexatious, nonsensical &, wasteful

Dear Eliot,

Although I fear that I am doing nothing more than wasting time, I again feel compelled on behalf of all the beneficiaries, including your children, to request that you stop. Please stop filing the wasteful, unnecessary, nonsensical rants like the one you filed today or yesterday.

It was 174 pages long. This one, and all the others, are difficult to follow and alarmingly repetitive. Each professional who receives them is billing their respective clients. If you are purposely trying to burn the assets of the trusts and estates, you are succeeding. It appears that you have formed some type of relationship with the claimant in Dad's estate, Bill Stansbury. Maybe it would be helpful for you to discuss your strategy with him. From my perspective, protecting the principal should be the most important priority for all parties. It goes without saying that I will never understand how you or your family are benefiting from your current strategy.

You seem to be writing these missives in the fashion of an attorney. Without legal training of any kind, it appears that you are making your filings even more convoluted with the effort of using legal terminology. In turn, it is actually burning money at a faster pace as it takes much longer to decode the complaints. It takes huge amounts of time to get through them.

Let's discuss this in a rational way. Alan and I are willing to speak with you about how to help you reign this in for the sake of the beneficiaries (and yourself in all honesty). It must be consuming a great deal of your time for what has been wholly unfruitful and discouraging. Each loss and denied motion is costing tens of thousands of dollars. For what gain?

Before filing another missive, why don't you agree to speak with us first with the hope of finding a more productive and reasonable way of dealing with all this? There is no downside for you in that approach. It has been 5 years since Dad died; time for a different tack. What do you say?
